JEALOUSY LEADS TO A MURDER.

Edgar E. Halsey Shot Dead by Stacey Rogers Last Night.

Jealousy Over a Woman Was the Cause of the Fatal Quarrel.

E. E. Halsey, a well-known carpenter of this city, was shot and instantly killed last night by Stacey Rodgers. The shooter is now locked up in the Oakland city prison, with a charge of murder against him. It is the first murder case in the history of the town. The remains of the victim lie at the branch morgue on Center street.

The shooting took place at the residence of Charles D. Haines, corner of Prince and Fulton streets, South Berkeley. It was the result of a quarrel between Halsey and Rodgers, brought about, it is said, by jealousy over a woman. The slayer claims that he acted in self defense. The woman in the case is Mrs. Eva Harrison, who is employed in the Haines household and who, though she is less then twenty years old, has a divorced husband in San Francisco.

Last night Halsey called at the Haines residence and was sitting with Mrs. Harrison in a room in the rear of the house when Rodgers came to the front door and inquired for Mr. Haines. Halsey heard him and recognized the voice as that of Rodgers, whom he had warned to stay away from the Haines home under penalty of being thrashed. Halsey hastened to the front door and out on to the front porch, where, according to the statement of Haines, who was standing by, he grappled with Rodgers and tried to force him down the stairs. Rodgers drew a revolver and fired point blank at Halsey's breast. He then hurriedly fled with a companion who stood on the sidewalk waiting for him.

Halsey, immediately after being shot, staggered back into the house. When he reached the sitting room he fell and died almost immediately in the presence of Haines, who stood powerless to help him.

Deputy Coroner Streightif and Marshal Lloyd of Berkeley were quickly notified. The former made arrangements to have the body removed to the Berkeley Branch Morgue. The Marshal started out after Rogers.

Halsey had been in Berkeley for some time and had recently opened a carpenter shop on Ashby avenue. He seems to have borne the reputation of being a sober and industrious workman. His sister, Mrs. Robert Hunter, with whom he resided, was nearly prostrated when she heard of his tragic death. She declared that the shock would kill the aged mother of the deceased, who lives in New York.

Stacy Rogers, the murderer, is hardly 22 years of age. He and Halsey have frequently quarreled and Halsey had threatened to thrash him if he came near the Haines house, where Mrs. Harrison was staying. Haines believes that Rogers came to the house last evening for the purpose of bothering Halsey, and when Halsey started for him he believed he would thrash him, and accordingly pulled a gun on Halsey.

Mrs. Harrison was rendered hysterical as a result of the tragic death of Halsey and could give no statement in regard to her relations with Halsey or with her husband, M. Harrison, from whom she has been separated for some time and of whose whereabouts, nothing is known. Mrs. Harrison is a rather prepossessing young blonde and is well known in South Berkeley, where she has resided for a number of years.

At ten o'clock Rodgers surrendered himself to Officer Jack Sherry at Golden Gate, and an hour after he was in the Oakland City Prison. He was very nervous and excitable, and at once sent for his brother, Leo Rodgers who is employed at Taylor's lumber yard in Berkeley. He is a respectable looking young fellow and gives his age as just 21.

Rodgers made the following statement:

"For some time past there has been some feeling of jealousy between Halsey and myself over Mrs. Eva Harrison. We never had any open quarrel, but I knew he did not like my calling at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Haines, where Mrs. Harrison stays. Yesterday afternoon we met and had a few words. Halsey said I was not wanted at the Haines house, and that he would see that I kept away. He said if he could not do it one way he would another. I knew what this meant, because I have heard that once he used a knife when in a scrape. I told him I would go to see Mrs. Harrison if I chose, and he defied me.

"He told me he was going to the house last night and I decided to go there too. When I met Mr. Haines, who opened the door, I asked him if he wanted me to keep away from the house. He said he did and just then I saw Halsey come out of a door at the head of the stairs. I looked at him and saw that he had his hand raised. I fancied I saw something shining in it and knowing what he had said in the afternoon about doing me up I drew my gun and fired. I remember seeing the flash and seeing him fall and then I ran off. I wandered around for an hour and then I was cooled off and decided to give myself up. I met Officer Sherry, told him of what I had done, and he brought me here.

"I am a newspaper man and three weeks ago was doing some work for the Stockton Independent. I have also worked for the Illustrated World. I have mostly done canvassing. I have no relatives on the coast except my brother. I met Mrs. Harrison before she was married. She did not live with her husband long and they have been separated for some time.

"Halsey is a married man, but does not live with his wife. He had trouble with her and ran off to Mexico till it blew over. I have known him for a long time, but we never quarreled till today. I never met his wife and do not know where she is. Halsey has on no occasion told me to keep away from his wife.

"I consider that I did the shooting in self-defense, because I really believed that Halsey had a gun in his hand when he raised it. I have never been in trouble in my life before, and although I was prepared to defend myself if need be, I did not go to the Haines house with any intention of shooting. I am sorry I have killed my friend, and very sorry that I have been forced to bring a lady's name into this unpleasant affair.

In one of the dead man's pockets a razor was found, which it is believed by some that he carried as a weapon of defense. The blade has two notches, and is far from being in good condition for use in shaving.

Among the letters left by the deceased are two that are regarded as of possible significance. One is signed "Eva" and is supposed to have been written by Mrs. Harrison. It is addressed to "Dear Edgar," and its substance is a request for five dollars. The other letter bears the signature of "Lillian." It is without a date. It asked Halsey to give the writer his address, as she had "something very important which she could not keep back," to tell him. The murdered man had torn the signature off, but the bit of paper bearing the name was found in his pocket.

Several very affectionate letters

RULES OF MARTIAL LAW.

Lieutenant Noble on Military Duties of Citizens.

Difference Between the Practice of Military Law Here and in Europe.

Lieutenant R. H. Noble, First U. S. Infantry, addressed the class in Senior Military yesterday on the legal aspects of a soldier's duties and responsibilities. He said the legal side is of great importance to all officers, and also to educated citizens who may be called on in emergencies on military duty.

When troops are called out in aid of civil power a change is made in the relations of the soldier to the civil law. On the continent of Europe a proper proclamation transfers the government to the military power, and the military commander becomes for the time being absolute, and independent of civil law, subject only to the higher military tribunal for infractions of order by himself or his soldiers. In this country and in England, however, no such provision exists as has grown up elsewhere out of the Roman Law. Our governmental system particularly has certain peculiarities, as the general government has but little original jurisdiction in the maintenance of law and order. Offences are mostly against the laws of the state concerned. There is no provision in the constitution except in regard to the suspension of habeas corpus. This even does not establish anything like strict martial law.

When troops are called out civil and military powers customarily act together in maintaining law and order, and after the trouble is over the government establishes courts of indemnity to adjust damages to property in time of trouble.

Martial law has its advantages among certain people, but the Anglo Saxon is a mere law abiding citizen and conducts the suppression of disorder on a more liberal plan, giving the disorderly elements every opportunity to return to peace. The regular soldier is the last to be called out.

When, however, State troops have been called out, and have in the cause of their duties done damage to life or property, the responsibility can still be fixed by a civil or criminal jury upon the officer who was in command, and a penalty exacted. An example is the case of Colonel Coit, who at the head of a detachment of Ohio State troops, under orders from Governor McKinley, fired into a mob of lynchers who were attacking a jail. He was indicted for murder, tried and subjected to inconvenience and annoyance in order to save his life. But such cases are very rare in this country.

The lecturer ended with an enumeration of the purposes for which alone the regular troops can be used, and upheld the usefulness of a small regular army in a modern government.

George Schmidt went to Martinez this afternoon.

PRESENTS OF LIQUOR ARE NOT WANTED.

EDITOR GAZETTE: A well known citizen has sent to the Columbia fire house a keg of beer as a present for the Columbia firemen. While the kindness is appreciated we cannot accept the gift. The Columbia Fire Company does not want any presents of beer or any other liquor. We beg to inform the donor that the present was not accepted and notify all citizens that one of the by-laws of the Columbia Fire Company forbids the keeping of any intoxicating liquor on the premises. This rule is one that we do not propose to violate.

We thought our position in this matter was already well known, but it seems not.

CHANGES IN OAKLAND OFFICES.

Chief of Police, Fire Chief and Assistant Deposed.

The Board of Public Works Discharge Them and Names Their Successors.

The Oakland Board of Public Works created a big political sensation this morning by deposing three of the leading office-holders of the city. Chief of Police Lloyd, Fire Chief Farr and Assistant Fire Chief Murdock were all summarily turned out of their berths and a successor to each one was promptly named. The sudden upheaval caused great political excitement and is the chief topics of conversation among Oakleaders today.

Captain Fletcher was made chief of police, N. Ball chief of the fire department, and ex-Chief Lawton assistant fire chief.

Some changes were not altogether unexpected. They are regarded as the result of a little meeting held last night by Mayor Thomas and ex-Chief Clement. As a result of this secret conference between Thomas and Clement, the knowing ones predicted that they would put through some changes at the board meeting today. When the board met the changes came.

The Tender Annuals May Now Be Planted.

Ferns Both Outside and in the Greenhouse Are Beginning to Break Nicely.

Geo. N. Tyler in Alameda Argus: I do not know what to make of the weather we have been having for the past two or three days. I put the boxes of cosmos and lobelia out in the open air to harden them off and Saturday morning's frost cut them to the root. It also cut hydrangeas that were sheltered by the lath house and even cut some of the plants under glass. But I think from now on all danger of frost is past and you can plant out any of the tender annuals, but I would advise you to protect them with old newspapers if you think there is any danger of frost.

Camellias that have finished blooming should be sprayed every day for the next month, so that the new growth will break nicely for next years bloom. They should also have abundance of water at the root and twice a week a dose of liquid manure. The best location for camellias is a northern or eastern exposure. They are perfectly hardy in this climate. I have two plants growing on this place that are ten feet high and six feet through at the top.

Scale is the most troublesome insect that infests the camellias, and to get rid of the same they should be sprayed with a coal oil emulsion as soon as they make their growth, and again in the fall before the buds begin to swell. All bulbous plants, if you want to keep the bulbs for the following year, should after flowering be given water as long as the leaves keep green, so that they will be in condition to bloom next year. Never wet the foliage or flowers of pelargoniums (Lady Washington geraniums), as it will cause both the flowers and foliage to drop. They are a plant that gets along with the smallest amount of water, as they are a native of South Africa and can stand long dry spells.

Funkias or day lilies as they are called, should be started into growth now. If they are in pots knock them out and shake off all the old soil; then repot in any good, rich earth and give through drainage. If planted outside they like a shady location same as ferns. Spotted callas make nice plants for the house or porch. Pot the corms in large pots, using very rich soil—one half thoroughly rotted manure is none too rich for them, as they are gross feeders. Give them thorough drainage, as they require abundance of water while they are growing.

Hydrangeas make fine pot plants for a porch, or for northern exposure. They also require very rich soil and thorough drainage, give them plenty of air at all times. All varieties of begonias and coleas can be started from cuttings now, also the rex variety from leaf.

Ferns both outside and in the greenhouse are beginning to break nicely now. Keep them sprayed in the morning and about noon, and they will repay this little attention ten fold before the season is over.

FAREWELL TO A GOLD SEEKER.

R. W. Good Leaves on Friday For the Far North.

Farewell Smoker Tendered Him by the Knights of Pythias Last Night.

Last night the members of University Lodge, No. 162, K. of P. gave a "Farewell" to R. W. Good, a member of the Lodge, who leaves Friday morning on the steamer Walla Walla for Klondike. There was a good attendance of members, and after the regular routine business had been conducted, the Pythians resolved themselves into a social body, for the purposes of exchanging words of good will, bon voyage, safe and speedy return, and lots of nuggets," for their big hearted Pythian, who leaves Berkeley. The order of Knights of Pythias is noted for its principles, and lessons taught of friendship. After all present had "smoked," the Chancellor Commander, James Carpenter called for speeches. The responses were given with a zest and ability that proved University Lodge has among its membership those who not only do right, but who also think and talk right. Appropriate sentiments were expressed in well chosen language by Knights E. W. Davis of the University of California, Good, Carpenter, Congdon, Hunt, Elliot, Holygate, Gunn, Miller and many others.

The members of University Lodge are preparing to visit the grand lodge which convenes in Santa Rosa in the month of May. They propose to go in a body with a neat, but attractive uniform, and to wear a badge of blue and gold in honor of the University for which the lodge is named.

UNION LABEL

A CUTE CONTRACTOR.

The street contractors of Berkeley are a pretty shrewd set of men but they cannot give any pointers to their brethren of San Francisco as the following instance will show. A street contractor, secured the permission of the Supervisors and a certain number of property owners to grade and pave a street by private contract. On completing the work, he presented the bills to all the property owners irrespective of whether they had signed or not. Of course those who had not entered into a contract refused to pay. This is exactly what the contractor had expected and he proceeded accordingly.

He managed to induce the Supervisors to order the work done and call for bids. Here he had a distinct advantage for the reason that any other bidder would have to tear up the paving laid by the original contractor and do the work over again. Contractor No. one having already completed the work presented his bid which the Supervisors accepted; then in due time made the proper showing to prove that the work had been done, and the unwilling property owners were forced to pay. In some respects, San Francisco is remarkably like Oakland.

THE WICKED FARMER.

The wicked Western farmers are responsible for the recent increase in the gold circulation. The increased activity in the West due to their prosperity, resulted recently in extraordinary demands upon New York, for currency and a rapid movement from that city toward the West. As a consequence there was an increase in demand for currency in that business center which resulted in calling in from Europe some of the gold due from the large exports which have been made during the past few months, but which had been held in the form of bills drawn against the shipments of corn and other commodities, and which are now being exchanged for gold, which is thus added to the circulating medium of the country.

THE NEW LOCAL SERVICE.

EDITOR GAZETTE: The twenty-minute local service between Berkeley and San Francisco which the railroad company is making preparations to inaugurate will be one of the biggest boons which has been vouchsafed to this city. The present service is entirely inadequate to the needs of a growing municipality such as Berkeley.

If certain conditions were different from what they are, it would be far better for us to be in a measure without any communication with San Francisco, but as it is we cannot have too good a service.

The new schedule will do much to advance the interests of Berkeley, and it will be welcomed by every right thinking CITIZEN.

THE JUSTICE COURTS.

It begins to look as if the Supreme Court will render a decision establishing the constitutionality of our Justice Courts. Certainly such a decision would be welcome, but no matter which way the appeal is decided we want to be informed with as little delay as possible the exact situation. Then if the decision is against us we can take steps to secure courts.

To the Point.

He talked of war with might an' main,
He was so lion-hearted!
He went an' got clean home again,
Afore the fightin' started!

"I sometimes wonder," said one enthusiast, "why the base ball season doesn't begin earlier."

"It's a wholly impractical idea," replied the other. "They've got to give us a chance to get over our spring colds. Otherwise how could we yell?"

"Sometimes," said Uncle Eben, "I has mer s'picions dat dat boy er mine doesn' show mo' respeck for advice 'case he sees how little his father done got out'n it."

It was an industrious farmer that the passer-by airily accosted as he made his preparation for irrigating a field.

"Ah," said the stranger, "preparing to water the waste?"

"Well," was the answer, "I got this idea from one o' these papers an' I don't know how it'll work. Mebbe I'll water the waste an' then agin, mebbe I'll only waste the water."

VANITY.

The sun comes up and the sun goes down,
And day and night are the same as one.
The years grows green, and the year grows brown,
As if what it did all were done.

And never go down in ships to the sea,
And a hundred ships are the same as one,
And backward and forward blows the breeze,
And what is it all, when all is done?

A tide with never a shore in sight,
Getting steadily on to the night.

The fisher dropped his net in the stream,
And a hundred streams are the same as one,
And the maiden dreameth her lovelit dream,
And what is it all, when all is done?

The net of the fisher the burden breaks,
And always the dreaming the dreamer wakes.

—Harriet Prescott Spofford.

STRONG HEREDITY.

Baby was just born. Her first act was to ring the bell. It was promptly answered by the parlor maid.

"My mother will need nourishment," she said, acknowledging the servant's introductory bow with a pleasant smile. "You had better warm some milk and water and get her bottle ready."

While the parlor maid went down to give the necessary orders to the cook Baby arranged her mother's pillows more comfortably.

"Goo, goo!" murmured Mrs. Corfield inarticulately in appreciation of the increase of comfort.

"Hush! It shall have its bottle and go to by-by," whispered Baby, deftly smoothing the coverlet.

A restless movement in the adjoining room, followed by a faint cry, distracted her attention. She slipped on a little dressing gown that lay on a chair ready for her use and hurried in to see what was the matter.

A man was tossing feverishly to and fro in a large cot surmounted with high rails. He had kicked off the bedclothes, and the cold air had awakened him.

"I suppose you're papa," she muttered, tugging at the blankets through the bars. "How tiresome you are, naughty man!"

She tapped him menacingly on the arm and shook a threatening finger. He commenced to whimper.

"Now, it's no use beginning to cry," she exclaimed. "I've got quite enough to see to without any nonsense of that sort. Be quiet, sir, will you?"

Baby stamped her foot. It had the desired effect, and Mr. Corfield quieted down. Then she returned to the other room. In a few minutes the bottle was brought up, and, having given it to her mother and tucked her up comfortably, Baby sat down on the edge of the bed to think.

There was so much to be done. And in spite of her ready made stock of intuitions and her rich inheritance of experience it was so difficult to set about it. In the first place, the parents must be fed and looked after. Baby could not leave them entirely to the servants; she must exercise a great deal of supervision over them herself. They were so helpless. But they had given her their all, mental and physical, in accordance with the universal law of heredity, and she must prove herself worthy of the gift by trying to bring them up in the right way. Then there were domestic matters to be attended to. And finally Baby must think about starting her own career, in which, of course, she would follow in her mother's footsteps.

Feeling herself to be a child of action, she did not sit musing for long. Mrs. Corfield was asleep. The only sign of life she gave was an occasional tug at the bottle, followed by the gurgle of deglutition. Baby crept softly out of the room and went down stairs. Had she been a boy natural curiosity would have prompted her to explore the house, but being of the sterner sex she walked straight into the library and sat down at the writing desk.

Before doing anything else she must put her birth in the papers. She wrote out half a dozen notices, choosing her name from a book which she took down from the shelves. The announcement read as follows:

"Miss Philippa Reginaldina Corfield begs to announce her birth at 18 Willoughby square on the 30th inst. Both parents are doing well."

It was nearly 5 o'clock. Having written personally to some of her relatives and dispatched her letters to the post, Baby rang for tea. But she was not allowed to enjoy that meal altogether undisturbed. First, papa cried. She had to go up stairs and soothe him off to sleep again. Then the noise woke mother, who became fretful and gave a great deal of trouble. In fact, Baby was kept so well employed between them that she had no time to dress for dinner.

Two or three days passed in this manner. Then came a letter, bearing the stamp of a government office, addressed to Miss Corfield. There had been other correspondence—congratulatory notes from relatives and so forth. But this was altogether different. On the face of the envelope, in the left hand bottom corner, were the letters "T. M." written in a bold hand. They were the initials of the prime minister.

With eager hands Baby tore open the cover and drew out the contents. The letter was couched in the following terms:

DEAR MISS CORFIELD—The magistracy of the Fourth area is just vacant. Knowing your mother's excellent qualifications for the post, and having seen the notice of your birth in the papers, I have much pleasure in offering you the appointment. Come and see me before taking up your official duties. Yours, etc., THE OBJECT MUSSTHELEIGH.

It was the very thing Baby would have chosen for herself. Her splendid inheritance of legal knowledge eminently qualified her for the post. Of course the work would fully occupy her time, but she must get a competent nursery tutor to look after Mrs. and Mr. Corfield. She wrote a warm letter of thanks to the premier accepting the magistracy, and at the same time put an advertisement in the paper for a competent man to take charge of her parents during their infancy.

Among other applicants for the latter situation was a respectable, unmarried, middle aged man. As his scientific principles were orthodox and he had no followers Baby engaged him. She was now practically freed from domestic worries and could devote herself to the public service. The visit to the prime minister, whom she found to be a charming girl a few years older than herself, was most satisfactory. Baby took up her work with zeal, and soon distinguished herself by her grasp of detail and sound judgment.

The only anxieties that beset her were at home. Her parents as time went on had to be dreaded more. Papa would, until his alphabet, and mother always leading him into mischief. They got into the kitchen and stole the jam. They had pillow fights on the landing when they should have been taking their midday sleep. They set all manner of booby traps for the nursery tutor and nearly worried him to death.

The climax was reached when they one day altogether disappeared. Not a trace of them could be found. The distracted tutor declared he had put them to bed at 12, as usual, for an hour's rest before their dinner, and when he went up to call them at 1 they were gone.

When Baby came home in the evening, she found the entire household in an uproar and the two helpless parents missing. The police were communicated with, descriptions of Mrs. and Mr. Corfield wired everywhere and an airship dispatched in search, provided with blankets and spoon food. But the night passed, and still the wanderers had not returned. Baby was obliged to go into court the following morning without her anxiety having been allayed. There were a number of cases to be disposed of, and the necessity of attending to her official duties helped to distract her mind. An amusing assault case, in which the occupants of a balloon and a flying machine had come to blows in the air, even caused Baby to forget her family troubles for a brief space.

The next case in the sheet was a charge of two minors being at large without any visible means of support. Baby had barely glanced at the list, and when her parents entered the dock in the custody of two policewomen she was completely paralyzed for the moment with mingled astonishment and consternation.

Then when she had recovered herself dignity and etiquette were alike forgotten. She scrambled down from the bench, knocked over a couple of forms full of spectators in her eagerness and rushed into the dock.

"My poor little parents!" she cried, clasping the frightened woman and man alternately in her arms. "I thought you were lost! Oh, how glad I am to have found you again."

Many of those present in court shed tears at this touching scene. The Corfields were, indeed, objects of pity. They had been out all night in the cold and rain, having been ultimately discovered in a suburban ditch, into which they had crept for shelter and then cried themselves to sleep.

Of course Baby gave them a good scolding on account of the escapade when she got home and dismissed the nursery tutor. But she was very thankful to have got them back safely and made up her mind that they should be better looked after in future.

In spite of all her care, however, she soon found herself an orphan. Papa was choked at a parents' kindergarten party through swallowing a sweetmeat whole, while Mrs. Corfield, a few weeks later, succumbed to a sudden attack of croup.

Baby, warned by her parents' fate, resolved to remain a spinster. She thus selfishly retained her ripened faculties for herself instead of aiding the world's progress by allowing the law of heredity its natural operation of instantaneously transmitting their developed maturity to a succeeding generation.—London Sun.

An Actor's Speech.

The oratorical and speechmaking habit on the part of some of the stage luminaries often leads to striking if not ridiculous results. De Wolf Hopper, decked out as a Spanish soldier of the sixteenth century, in the act of reciting the performances of the immortal Casey is a case in point. Could anything more absurd be imagined than Francis Wilson, in the costume of a vagabond, making a serious speech, assailing his enemies and hurling figures of speech at his detractors. To be called on for a speech when robed in such habiliments would be sufficient to disconcert anybody, including the actor. Jerome Sykes, when with the Bostonians, was called upon for a speech in Philadelphia under peculiar circumstances. The finale of the last act of "Prince Ananias found Sykes and McDonald sitting on a throne, Sykes smoking a cigarette, robed in a Roman toga of green with lavender drapery thrown over his shoulder and a papier mache crown on his head. Irving into the construction of the comedian garbed thus to have an audience set up a cry for a speech. Sykes squirmed, while McDonald said, "Go ahead, Jerome; say something."

Sykes ambled down to the footlights and said: "Ladies and gentlemen, Mr. McDonald, my compatriot who sits up there, informed me just a minute ago that he had a neat little speech prepared that he'd like to have a chance to try on the audience. I hope you'll give him a chance."

Whereupon McDonald looked silly, and Sykes was never again prompted to "go ahead and say something."—New York Telegram.

Smart Fashions In Ten Gowns.

The blousy effect follows even the tea gown, and where a full Russian front is inserted of soft material it is usually bloused slightly, quite low at the waist line in front, being held in place with ribbon or a belt of jewels running across the front only. Many of the tea gowns have long stole ends that reach quite to the bottom of the skirt and may be of lace, chiffon, net or of the material employed in the gown, trimmed with ruchings, insertion or tiny silk ruffles running across the stole and placed at intervals the entire length of this telling feature of the gown. They may be held at the shoulders with rosettes or bows of satin ribbon, or they may be set in at the shoulder seam. In some gowns where this is the principal trimming they start from the back at the bottom of the waist line, crossing the shoulders, where they are held in place with a full bow, and from there fall gracefully to the lower edge of the skirt. When used this way, they are generally made of chiffon, wide ribbon or the half width of some soft silk, and are laid in soft, flat folds in the back and tacked to the gown in the back, then hung loose in the front from the shoulder.

The latest tea gown has a demitrain, which adds much to the grace and elegance of the garment, as well as keeping the pace of the fashionable dress skirt.—Woman's Home Companion.

We'll fix it for you.

The GAZETTE wants to have the business men of Berkeley in the front rank in every respect. They are a pretty bright and clever class now, but there is always room for improvement. Now we are going to show our interest in a practical manner.

The "Gazette" has a number of Certificates

This morning Mr. Haines stated that Halsey called at his home last night, not to see Mrs. Harrison, but to discuss the specifications for a new residence that was to have been built for Haines by Halsey.

The inquest over the remains of Halsey will be held tomorrow evening.
